

[e1] Helicopter parents, in spite of their good intentions, often suffocate their children with too much attention.

[e2] Kids need to have some freedom to have some of their time for themselves.

[e3] If they aren't allowed the freedom to make some of their own decision, and mistakes, they have an unreasonable expectation that everything will always be laid out in a straight, structured line.

[e4] However, the helicopter children do perform better in school and have an opportunity to do much more extracurricular activities.

[e5] In summary, kids need to be able to be kids.

[e6] Helicopter parents are bad for children.
